

Down:

1. How you look back on your time at TCU. Also a line in the Alma Mater.
2. This unique gallery is home to pieces of outer space.
3. Started in 1940, they have provided a way for supporters to help talented TCU student-athletes receive a top tier education while pursuing their goals both on and off the field of competition.
4. The quarterly publication all about campus happenings.
6. Once a golf course, now home to Greek and non-Greek residence halls.

Across:

5. TCU's first official Chancellor has a building named in honor of him, where the current Chancellor offices on the fourth floor.
7. "The Megalith at TCU", as affectionately christened by the faculty, is the University's response to the New Stone Age.
8. This campus building has an unusual history, and was the result of a gift from a woman with no TCU connection.
9. This statue is located in front of the Winthrop Rockefeller Building for Ranch Management.
10. This timepiece was created by clockmaker and designer William Andrewes and honors the University's specific geographic site, with a world map centered on the University's coordinates and a time scale created expressly for TCU.